

DOLLARS & SENSE ANNUAL INDEX

September 1986-July/August 1987

SEPTEMBER 1986 (#119)

Your Wallet or Your Job High unemployment is still the tradeoff for low inflation.

In Pursuit of Pay Equity Comparable worth campaigns are raising women's wages.

Is Good Politics, Bad Business? Taking stock of the worker ownership movement.

Capitalismo, No! The contradictions of private farmers' markets in Cuba. Highlander Center Still on the cutting edge of change in the South.

OCTOBER 1986 (#120)

The New Service Economy The United States is no longer the goods-producing economy it once was.

Taking Care of Business? A comparison of the market-oriented policies of Ronald Reagan and Margaret Thatcher.

Does Rock 'N Roll Aid Spell Relief? Did the rock benefits make a difference to hungry Africans?

High-tech Organizing Around the World Worker activism is one the rise in the global high-tech industry.

Undercounting the Unemployed The official unemployment rate hides almost as much as it reveals.

The Hidden Debt Crisis U.S. Households are soon going to experience their own debt crisis as they borrow to make ends meet.

NOVEMBER 1986 (#121)

Tax Reform Hoopla The much-ballyhooed tax reform promises anything but fair taxation.

Just to Make Ends Meet A look at one of the fastest growing industries in the country—temp work.

A Premium on Profits Exploding the myth of the insurance crisis.

Hold the Line, Please Phone workers stemmed the tide of wage and benefits concessions.

Producing for Survival The Nicaraguan economy is feeling the strain of U.S. military and economic pressure.

DECEMBER 1986 (#122)

White Lines, Bottom Lines The cocaine industry is exhibiting all the signs of a mature industry.

Working, But Still Poor A growing proportion of the poor in this country have jobs—bad jobs.

Land Means Power Who owns North Carolina, and how does land ownership translate into power?

There's No Place Like Home The federal government is thinking of lifting the ban on homework.

Evaluating CDC's Community Development Corporations are still a toll for community control.

JANUARY/FEBRUARY 1987 (#123)

A $220 Billion Red Herring Budget debates in Congress are now dominated by deficit reduction rather than spending priorities.

Defining Away the Poor How to reduce the poverty rate without reducing poverty.

Ray Rogers' Strategy for Labor Union Consultant Ray Rogers talks about corporate campaigns and labor's fightback.

Jumping Off the Debt Treadmill Mexico should default on its debt, and it might not be a capitalist catastrophe.

First Draft The fledgling National Writers Union is ready to take on big name publishers.

MARCH 1987 (#124)

It's All in the Family In the United States, family policy is implicit, and from the far right.

Mandela, Massachusetts A move for black political autonomy highlights the disenfranchisement of urban minorities.

The Raiding Game Hostile takeovers are all the rage, and the victim may be the U.S. economy.

Revolution or Restoration In the wake of Cory Aquino's people power revolution, it looks like business as usual in the Philippines.

The Buck Stops Where? Why hasn't the trade deficit fallen with the drop in the dollar?

APRIL 1987 (#125)

Saving the Auto Industry from Itself Can U.S. automakers learn the secret of Japan's success?

Scandal at the Fed? The Federal Reserve Board may have covered up data on the increasing concentration of wealth in the United States.

New Age, Low Wage Most of the new jobs in the United States are low wage.

The Labor Climate What's the climate for labor where you live?

Raising the Minimum Wage It's time to raise the minimum wage, which has been frozen since 1981.

Ties that Bind The Frontline States of southern Africa have strong ties of dependency on apartheid South Africa.

MAY 1987 (#126)

Reaganomics Report Card Reagan gives himself an "A" but he hasn't done his homework.

Life on the Fast Lane New Japanese manufacturing techniques in the U.S. auto industry are producing better cars and speedup for workers.

Duvalierism without Duvalier Baby Doc is gone, but the Haitian people are still waiting—and organizing—for change.

Power Struggle Public power systems are the new strategy for communities trying to hold down electric bills.

The Best and the Brightest Peace Corps involvement in the third world has less to do with development than with U.S. foreign policy.

JUNE 1987 (#127)

The Retreat from Welfare The new wave of welfare reform proposals are only thinly veiled forms of workfare.

Uneven Development Downeast Maine's economic boom is bringing problems along with prosperity.

Fire Sale on Debt Third world governments trading debt for equity may really be trading away their sovereignty.

GNP—Does it Measure Up? The gross national product falls short as a good measure of economic health.

From Divestment to Reinvestment Community and student activists in Baltimore are trying to switch investments from South Africa into low-income neighborhoods.

JULY/AUGUST 1987 (#128)

Beating the Trading Blues Is a full-scale trade war on the horizon?

The Cheese Stands Alone Federal food handouts spending may have helped the poor, but it was an accident.

Coping with the "New Federalism" Cuts in federal spending are leaving the burden on state and local governments to provide services.

Reckall for Profits Pharmaceuticals are big business, and government support is key to profitability.

Prison Bailout Prisons for profit are the trend of the future, but what about inmate rehabilitation?